

Learner Type The Lifeguard Lifeguard learners are eager to take part in the experience, but their anxiety of failure and fixed notions of how to engage with certain materials, tools and processes can make it difficult for them to fully embrace the making process.	Learner Type The Hesitator The Hesitator is interested in the making process, but might be uncomfortable with the possibility of failing, shy away from experiences that seem difficult, and may need reassurance along the way.	Learner Type The Dramatist The Dramatist has an outsized reaction in the face of challenges which prevents them from moving forward.
Learner Type The Window Shopper The Window Shopper loves to try new things and is drawn to activities that may have a fast result, but may not have the patience to engage deeply or over time.	Learner Type The Doubter The Doubter voices concern or worry that they will not be successful, or makes rebuffs attempts at supporting or promoting their ideas.	Learner Type The Jokester The Jokester uses humor to self-critique, such as pointing at the materials and laughing, suggesting that they purposely made something that would fail for fun.

Learner Type The Big Dreamer The Big Dreamer has grand plans for their project in an exciting but potentially too grand for the time or materials available.	Learner Type The Incrementalist The Incrementalist takes on risk through small experiments or iterations of their idea, sometimes breaking down each part to test it independently before combining.	Learner Type The Quiet Thinker The Quiet Thinker is fully immersed in the process of making, but rarely verbalizes or otherwise shares their thoughts, ideas or challenges with others.
